Farmers Turn To Bermudagrass

Most farmers and ex-farmers who have ever chopped with a hoe have no doubt given bermudagrass (wiregrass) a good "cussing", and just the thought of bermudagrass recalls those unpleasing memories, not to speak of planting it. Now many are turning to bermudagrass for pasture.

Through plant breeding and selection, hybrid varieties of bermudagrass that don't produce viable seed have been developed. The variety adapted to our area is Midland Bermudagrass. Although common bermudagrass does spread from seed, Midland cannot. As a matter of fact, it is hard to get a stand of Midland established. Hybrid bermudagrass is more productive than the common variety.

Bermudagrass begins growing in late spring and grows until fall. This is the time that fescue and orchardgrass grow very slowly. We usually have a drought sometime during the summer and pastures are overgrazed. By having a warm – season grass such as bermudagrass to turn the stock on, it will keep our orchardgrass and fescue pastures from being overgrazed and becoming thin. It is also important to have some pasture other than fescue. Continuous fescue grazing can cause fescue foot.

On a recent farm tour to Nottoway County some Midland Bermudagrass planted last year was inspected by John Alvis, James Bennett, Hugh Braford, Hunter Evans, John Notestein, Jim Smith and Bob McClenny. It was explained that soil testing and proper fertilization is very important. The Seedbed must be well prepared. Weeds must be controlled with herbicides during the first few months.

Planting is done by a special machine that buries the sprigs at the rate of 15 bushels per acre. The planting machine operates similar to a 2-row tobacco planter. These planters are very expensive. The Piedmont Soil and Water Conservation District owns a planter and will furnish the planter, the operator, and 15 bushels of sprigs at a cost of about $35.00 per acre for small acreages. The farmer would prepare his land, furnish a tractor with a three point hitch and assist with planting.

Several local farmers have indicated they want to plant some Midland Bermudagrass this spring. Since the planting machine will have to be brought into the county, the Piedmont Soil and Water Conservation District would like to complete the planting before moving out. Those interested in more information please contact the Soil Conservation Service or County Extension Office.
